"But does the New Yark baseban par-lic appreciate that I am gradually re-modelling the Yankee team? I have just five men left of the regular team of 1917. Baker, Pipp. Peck, Shawkey and Mogridge. I also have retained a few of the youngsters who were with the club in the fall of 1917.

"Ive been working especially hard to build up a new staff of plichers. Some of the men I have let go have done well of the men I have let go have done well elsewhere, but a fact that is generally overlooked is that they were of no use to the New York club. Take the case of Alian Russel. He did good work for the Red Sox when he was sent to Boston in the Mars dral. But the fact remains he wasn't delivering in New York. Russell is a good pitcher, but he couldn't win for me, and when I had the chance to get Mays and Boston held out for Hussell I had no hesitancy is
